A Pride of the Counties exhibit at this year’s Kentucky State Fair will show how members of Woodford County’s youth are taking action in their communities, much like the United Nations’ Youth Envoy.

A PRIDE OF THE COUNTIES exhibit will show Kentucky State fairgoers why “All Roads Lead to Woodford County” beginning today and continuing through Aug. 24.

The exhibit, created by students from three Woodford County high schools, is called “A Fresh Coat of Paint,” and features work by students who were inspired by a peeling, stone wall along McElroy Road near Woodford County High School’s main entrance.

The wall, which has always been a community landmark, was featured in a Woodford County High School sculpture class last year. Now, students from Lexington’s Marshall County High School, Versailles High School and Woodford County High School have created an exhibit to bring the forgotten landmark back to life.
