President's Awards for Diversity

The Diversity Awards ceremony will be held April 17, 2008 in the Lexmark Room of the Main Building and will begin at 3:00pm. Nominations are open until the deadline of February 29, 2008 and instructions and the nomination form are found at www.uky.edu/pcd. The keynote speaker for the ceremony will be Hasan Davis. Hasan Davis is a lawyer, educator, youth advocate and actor. Hasan founded Empowerment Solutions in 1998, following his position as the director of the Youth Violence Prevention Project for the city of Lexington, Kentucky. Hasan is a part time community artist-in-residence. His Staging Success curriculum combines the arts of theater, creative writing and storytelling to address important social issues with youth and adult participants. We look forward to Mr. Davis' address at the Awards Ceremony.

Next year's diversity awards ceremony will be revamped to be inclusive and to reflect what this institution is about on a more global scale. The keynote speaker brought to our campus for the event next year will engage the campus community around the celebration of the diversity awards ceremony. Suggestions and ideas are welcome as we endeavor to develop new strategies for this annual event.

The PCD website is constantly changing and is an informational campus-wide tool. The commission members are encouraged to visit the website regularly and to get the word out about this "one stop shopping" for campus wide events, information, etc. Thanks to Rakesh Kandibanda, graduate assistant to the PCD, for his dedication, commitment and excellence in creating and maintaining the PCD website.

Nominating Committee:

Bessie Guerrant

Undergraduate Student Affairs

Mary Bolin-Reece, Committee Chair, reported that at the last meeting, the committee's discussion centered on two related topics and documents:

1. Principles of a revised General Education Curriculum [derived from the USP Reform Steering Committee proposal]
2. Defining desired outcomes and key indicators of UK undergraduates' experience, related to the vision of UK as a diverse and inclusive institutional culture worthy of a Top 20 public research university

The committee members in attendance agreed on their support of all seven key points in the "Principles" USP reform document. The USP reform themes dovetail with the PCD committee's hopes for the UK undergraduate experience – that beyond mastering specific content, our students will develop skills and a process for active, life-long learning which will allow them to become culturally proficient so that they are successful in a global environment. We appreciated the statement, "Life does not always present itself as a problem to be solved; it often appears as a dilemma that must be resolved." The March 1-31, 2008 is the Multiculture Festival campus wide. Complete details and information are located on the PCD website.

Bessie Guerrant reported that UK had 22 students ACCEPTED as undergraduate research students, but only 19 will be able to attend and present their research at the 2008 National Conference on Undergraduate Research (NCUR), to be held April 10-12th at Salisbury University, in Maryland (<http://www.salisbury.edu/ncur22>).

Allan Richards concluded the commission meeting with the following remarks:

“Some 6 months ago we started a journey. With the adoption of our Strategic Plan for Diversity, we decided, as a Commission, to create an institutional culture that is diverse and inclusive based on our work and recommendations to the President of UK. An institutional culture that is diverse and inclusive will not only meet the Diversity Goal and the Top 20 status laid out in the UK Strategic Plan but it will make diversity central to the day-to-day operation of the university, prepare students to successfully navigate the global community, provide opportunities for faculty and staff growth and advancement, provide administrators with the tools to develop an execute policies that are meaningful to effectively communicate to all constituencies, engage and enlist communities in the fundamental struggles for social and economic justice and equality, and above all demonstrate that our histories do not have to be impediments to success but an asset to innovation and goodwill.

As we seek to move forward, we should not only see the Commission Strategic Plan as a roadmap to our goal to create an institutional culture that is diverse and inclusive but we should understand that this is not enough. We should change minds and we should change old attitudes about diversity and inclusion. This I know is a time-consuming process because it means carefully and sensitively educating this campus for a paradigm shift from a piecemeal approach to promoting diversity to one that is an holistic approach where everyone is integrally tied to the creation of an institutional culture that is diverse and inclusive.

Gardner (1983), who is credited for discovering that we have multiple intelligences, suggests that for the most part we are the sum total of our experiences. From this we can extrapolate that no two people are alike and thus they bring different perspectives to the world of issues that we are facing and that we have to grapple with. Diversity is about you and me; diversity is about all of us; and all of us must participate fully in this effort to create an institutional culture that is diverse and inclusive if our efforts are going to be successful.

Strategically we are currently working very hard to develop important and necessary tools to guide our decisions and programmatic activities on this commission. Assessment strategies are the core tools in this pragmatic process. And the work of the Commission Committees is bringing these assessment strategies closer to reality. Let me thank you the Committees for the fabulous work you are doing. Soon you will see the fruits of your labor.

March 25th is the date set for me to receive your committees' efforts in developing strategic indicators and outcomes. In our next meeting, we will discuss how we are going to proceed for the April and May meetings. Thank you”!
