

Walter C. Foreman, Jr., was born in Berkeley, CA, but spent most of his now distant youth in Oregon. He has an A.B. from Harvard College and a Ph.D. from the University of Washington, where he wrote a dissertation on Shakespeare under the direction of Roger Sale. He has taught in the English Department at the University of Kentucky for thirty-five years. Since the late 80s he has also been involved with several interdisciplinary teaching programs at UK--the FEAST program, the Modern Studies Curriculum, and, since 2000, the Honors Program. He has published work on Shakespeare, Fellini, Antonioni, and Lewis and Clark. The focus of Mr. Foreman's research these days is Shakespeare movies and revenge in English Renaissance drama. He lives in Lexington with his wife Nancy, his daughter Abigail, his father Walter Sr., and his dogs Daisy and Charlotte.
