

Dr. Susan Larson is an Assistant Professor of Spanish in the College of Arts & Science's department of Hispanic Studies. She received her PhD from the University of Arizona and worked at Fordham University's Bronx and Manhattan campuses before coming to the University of Kentucky five years ago. She specializes in twentieth-century Spanish narrative and is currently engaged in research on questions of modernity and the social and cultural implications of urban planning, particularly in Madrid. Dr. Larson teaches courses at the undergraduate and graduate levels with such titles as "Space, Place and Culture," "Cultural Resistance in Social Pace," "Spanish Cinema" and "Hispanic Kentucky."
