

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The 1990-92 University System Self-Study has clearly been a University-wide effort. Cooperation and support were evident from all segments of the University. Of particular note are those faculty, staff, students, and administrators who participated in the forums and surveys or served as chairs or members of the Steering Committee or one of the principal committees.

Several persons, however, merit special recognition. James Hougland and David Nash served as chair and vice chair respectively of the Steering Committee. Karen Carey was the Associate Director and Editor. They also served on the Executive Committee which met semi-weekly throughout most of the process to assist in planning, monitoring, and evaluating the study. Their creative and synergic ideas and their sustained commitment contributed significantly to the quality of the Self-Study.

The Self-Study Office was fortunate to have a succession of excellent and dedicated administrative assistants in Regina Gibson and Janet DeLacey. Kevin Richerson, Gina Glover, and John Robert Reynolds served as student assistants. Janet Cabaniss provided computer systems support. James Wolf and the staff of the Survey Research Center assisted in development of the survey instruments and in coding and tabulating data. Melissa Johnson, Jonathan Ragan and David Croshaw tabulated and analyzed survey data. Jane Vance and Mimi Siegel provided editorial assistance. Karen Willmott, Claire Baker, Faye Biddle, Sue Ginocchio, and JoAnn Smith contributed to the design and production of the reports.

The Self-Study was an open, collaborative, and thorough process which went well beyond the minimum criteria established by the Southern Association. President Wethington encouraged such a comprehensive study and provided the necessary resources.

The Director is deeply grateful to each of these persons for the quality of their efforts and for their commitment, cooperation, and patience.
