Department of Modern and Classical Languages, Literatures, and Cultures Division of French and Italian

FR 103-001 (French Film) Student Outcomes

Students will be able to:

• analyze the formal and technical aspects of film language;

• recognize and define the primary aesthetic movements of French cinema, and situate them in social and historical context;

- develop a critical language appropriate to the analysis of film;
- communicate their analyses effectively in written form.

FR 103 French Film Dr. Jeffrey Peters 1031 POT 257-6747 jnp@uky.edu

Objectives:

In this course, we will trace the evolution of French filmmaking from 1895, the year of the début of the Cinématographe in Paris, to the present. We will examine the primary aesthetic movements that defined French cinema over the course of the twentieth century, beginning with the seminal work of Georges Méliès and the Lumière brothers, and continuing through surrealism and silent film, poetic realism in the 1930s, the cinema of the Occupation, film noir, the New Wave, and the beginnings of the digital age. We will explore issues of aesthetics, film theory, and social commentary, while combining discussions of historical context with analysis of the technical elements specific to film. We will also ask how cinema has expressed the cultural values, anxieties, and conflicts that have shaped French identity over the last century. Prior experience or coursework in cinema is not expected or assumed. No knowledge of French is necessary.

Required Texts:

Alan Williams, Republic of Images: A History of French Filmmaking. Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1992. David Boardwell and Kristin Thompson, Film Art. An Introduction. 7th Edition. New York: McGraw-Hill, 2004. Coursepack of readings.

Assignments

In addition to taking midterm and final examinations, students will be required to write three essays, each four to six pages in length. The first, due on Monday, September 29, will be a close analysis of one frame from one of the films that will have already been viewed. The details of this analysis will be presented in class. In two other essays, due on Monday, November 3 and Friday, December 5, respectively, students will respond to a question that will be distributed in class. The essays will be graded for the concision and precision of the thesis statement, the overall structure and organization of the argument, the ability of students to incorporate into their writing the technical language of film analysis presented in class and to substantiate their analyses with specific examples taken from films viewed for class.

Dear Professor Carey,

I am writing to notify you of a new course that the UK Division of French and Italian (Department of Modern and Classical Languages, Literatures, and Cultures) is currently submitting for approval to the university.

The course is FR 103 (French Film). The course description, as it appears on our application, is as follows:

A history of the French cinema from the early twentieth century to the present. Emphasis on the primary aesthetic movements of French cinematic expression in social and historical context. Attention given to the formal elements specific to film, techniques of film analysis, and the nature of visual culture. Viewing of films outside of class required. Taught in English, with no knowledge of French necessary.

Thank you and please let me know if you have any questions concerning this course.

Yours sincerely,

Jeffrey Peters
