A tenure-track Assistant Professor is sought for the Master of Public Health Program within the School of Health Sciences at Oakland University. The Master of Public Health Program, launched in Fall 2013, is a two-year generalist program that provides students with hands-on, skill-building experiences through a community-based participatory research approach to learning. Using an innovative teaching model, the program incorporates service-learning and community-based participatory research throughout the curriculum. The successful candidate will be instrumental in helping to build this new program and its faculty.

The successful candidate will have teaching strengths at the graduate and undergraduate levels in biostatistics and the basic health science disciplines (e.g., community health, health promotion and education, health behavior, nutrition, pharmacology, pathology, or medical ethics). The candidate is expected to initiate and maintain a program of research, scholarship, and community service.

Requirements
A doctoral degree (e.g., PhD, DrPH) is required. Doctoral candidates who are currently ABD but will defend prior to August 15, 2016 will be considered. While a doctoral degree in biostatistics, statistics, or related quantitative field is preferred, applicants with a PhD in public health, health education, health promotion, community health, or related field and a Master of Science degree in biostatistics or an MPH with a concentration in biostatistics will be considered. Preference will be given to candidates with evidence of competency in applied statistical methodology and experience with intervention research projects, including projects conducted in collaboration with other academic scholars, health departments, and/or community-based organizations.

School Description:
The School of Health Sciences is home to undergraduate programs in Health Sciences; Occupational Safety and Health; Biomedical Diagnostic and Therapeutic Sciences; Applied Health Sciences; and Wellness, Health Promotion, and Injury Prevention. In addition to the Master of Public Health degree described above, graduate programs include a doctoral program in Physical Therapy and master’s degree programs in Safety Management and Exercise Sciences. In Fall 2012, the School of Health Sciences moved into the new state-of-the-art LEED platinum certified Human Health Building.

Application Information:
Position begins August 15, 2016. Applications are encouraged by December 15, 2015, but will be accepted until the position is filled. For questions, call Melissa Reznar at (248) 364-8668 or e-mail reznar@oakland.edu. Required application materials include: (a) detailed letter of application outlining experience in teaching, research, and service; (b) curriculum vita; and (c) names, addresses, e-mail addresses, and telephone numbers of three (3) professional references. Applicants must submit all materials electronically by accessing the posting at http://jobs.oakland.edu/postings/6083.