Contributors

Michael E. Bailey is associate professor of government at Berry College. His research focuses on the presidency, democratic theory, and religion and politics. He work has been published in Polity, Annual Review of Political Science and Journal of Church and State.

Jan Bardsley is associate professor and chair of the Department of Asian Studies at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She is the author of The Bluestockings of Japan: New Woman Fiction and Essays from Seitō, 1911–1916 (University of Michigan, 2007). With Laura Miller, she co-edited Bad Girls of Japan (Palgrave, 2005) and Manners and Mischief: Gender, Power, and Etiquette in Japan (University of California Press, 2011).

Shane Joshua Barter is associate director of the Pacific Basin Research Center and assistant professor at Soka University of America. He is the author of Civilian Strategy in Civil War: Insights from Indonesia, Thailand, and the Philippines (Palgrave, forthcoming) as well as several articles related to secessionism and post-conflict elections in Southeast Asia.

Carl Becker is an undergraduate student at UNC-Chapel Hill studying Chinese and Business Administration. Carl has studied Chinese for four years, and in the summer of 2013 received a grant to from the Center for International Educational Exchange to study Chinese at Shanghai's East China Normal University. Upon graduation, Carl hopes to utilize his Chinese studies by embarking on a career in mainland China.

B. Korban Boatright is an undergraduate philosophy student at Berry College. He is co-authoring a chapter on the nature of the soul and many-worlds metaphysics in the upcoming book BioShock and Philosophy.

John Caldwell is a lecturer in Hindi-Urdu at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He has an undergraduate degree in Russian history and literature from Harvard University, a master’s degree in music from the University of Michigan, and a business degree from Yale University. He is fluent in Hindi-Urdu and has co-directed UNC’s Summer in India program since 1999. John plays bassoon in the Raleigh and Durham Symphonies and in the North Carolina Wind Orchestra.
Marice Fernando holds a MS in Conflict Analysis & Resolution from George Mason University. Her research interests include post-conflict reconciliation.

John Hickman is associate professor of Government and International Studies at Berry College. He holds a Ph.D. from the University of Iowa in Political Science and a J.D. from Washington University in St. Louis, and is the author of the 2013 University Press of Florida book Selling Guantánamo: Exploding the Propaganda Surrounding America's Most Notorious Military Prison.

Li-ling Hsiao is associate professor of Chinese language and literature at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Her research encompasses literature, art, history, and printing. She is the author of The Eternal Present of the Past: Illustration, Theater, and Reading in the Wanli Period, 1573–1619 (Brill, 2007), and she is now finishing a second book titled Drama Illustration as Drama Criticism: The Late Ming Illustrated Editions of Pipa ji.

Keith Leslie Johnson is associate professor of English at Georgia Regents University, where he teaches modernist literature, world humanities, and contemporary Japanese fiction and film. He is the author of a forthcoming book on Czech animator Jan Svankmajer and is completing a second book about the posthuman imagination in manga and anime called Cyberpunk Ecologies. He is an associate editor of the Southeast Review of Asian Studies.

David Peter Lawrence is associate professor in the Department of Philosophy and Religion at the University of North Dakota. His publications include Rediscovering God with Transcendental Argument: A Contemporary Interpretation of Monistic Kashmiri Saiva Philosophy (SUNY Press, 1999); and The Teachings of the Odd-Eyed One: A Study and Translation of the Virūpaṃśapāṇiṃśaka with the Commentary of Vidyācakravartin (SUNY Press, 2008). Dr. Lawrence is annotating and translating Abhinavagupta’s Iśvarapratyabhijñāvimarsinī.
Jeffrey S. Lidke is chair of the Department of Religion and Philosophy at Berry College. A specialist in Sanskritic religio-philosophical traditions, Lidke’s recent interests have turned towards the interdisciplinary field of the neurology of spiritual experiences. His forthcoming book, The Goddess Within and Beyond the Three Cities (Edwin Mellen Press, 2013), exhibits his interdisciplinary training as a textualist, anthropologist and historian of religions with specific focus on the Śrī Vidyā Śākta Tantric traditions of Kathmandu, Nepal.

Nikita Malik is an economist with two master’s degrees from the University of Oxford. Her research interests lie in political risk and international security of the Middle East and South Asia. She currently writes for the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, as well as the Huffington Post. Nikita is currently conducting fieldwork in Jordan, and is fluent in English, Spanish, Hindi, and Arabic.

Daniel A. Metraux is professor of Asian studies and international relations at Mary Baldwin College and adjunct professor of history and culture in the graduate program at Union Institute and University. His books include The Soka Gakkai Revolution (1994), Burma’s Modern Tragedy (2004), and The Asian Writing of Jack London (2010). His most recent publication is a chapter titled “The Soka Gakkai and Human Security” in Religion and Human Security (Oxford University Press).

Chaitram Singh is Gund Professor of Government & International Studies and former Dean of the School of Humanities and Social Sciences (1997-2001) at Berry College in northwest Georgia. His research interests center on civil-military relations in the Third World. He is the associate Editor of the Journal of Third World Studies and the author of four books, including the award-winning novel, The Flour Convoy.
Kerry Martin Skora is Professor and Chair of Religious Studies at Hiram College in Ohio. He is the author of several articles on Abhinavagupta, employing phenomenology to bring attention to the lived body in making sense of Abhinavagupta’s lifeworld. His new work takes a turn toward eco-phenomenology to uncover the radical ecological implications of the life and teachings of Longchenpa, as well as contemporary Bhutanese religious traditions, for the survival of Earth and all sentient beings.

Philip Szmedra is professor of Economics at Georgia Southwestern University. He earned a Bachelor of Arts in economics from the Pennsylvania State University and a Master of Science and a Ph.D. in agricultural economics from the University of Georgia.

Afroz Taj is associate professor of Hindi-Urdu at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. His research interests include Hindi-Urdu poetry, Indian drama and musical theater, and Indian cinema. He is director of the UNC Summer in India Study Abroad Program and the host of the weekly Geet Bazaar radio program. His scholarship includes The Court of Indra and the Rebirth of North Indian Drama (2006).

Sthaneshwar Timalsina is associate professor of Indian Studies at San Diego State University. His areas of interest include Indian philosophy, Indian and comparative philosophy, Tantric studies, consciousness studies, and cognitive science. He has published two books (Seeing and Appearance, 2006; Consciousness in Indian Philosophy, 2009) and over thirty-five articles in the areas of Indian philosophy, ritual studies, visualization, Tantric studies, and comparative literature.

David Gordon White is the J. F. Rowny Professor of Comparative Religions at the University of California, Santa Barbara and Associate Research Fellow at the Centre d’Etudes de l’Inde et de l’Asie du Sud in Paris. He is the author of Myths of the Dog-Man (University of Chicago Press, 1991), The Alchemical Body: Siddha Traditions in Medieval India (University of Chicago Press, 1996); Kiss of the Yogini: “Tantric Sex” in its South Asian Contexts (University of Chicago Press, 2003); Sinister Yogis (University of Chicago Press, 2009); and The Yoga Sutra of Patanjali: A Biography (Princeton University Press, 2014). He is also the editor of Tantra in Practice (Princeton University Press, 2000) and Yoga in Practice (Princeton University Press, 2011), as well as over seventy articles, chapters, and reviews. In 2007-08, he was the recipient of a prestigious John Simon Guggenheim award.
Dongming Zhang is assistant professor of Chinese and Asian Studies at Furman University. He holds a Ph.D. from Cornell University in East Asian Literature, a M.A. from University of Colorado in Asian Studies, and a B.A. from Beijing University in Chinese language and literature. Dr. Zhang has taught Chinese language and literature at various prestigious institutions, such as Cornell University, Middlebury College, and Furman University. He also has a wealth of experience directing Chinese language immersion programs.

Jiayan Zhang is associate professor of history at Kennesaw State University. He received his doctoral degree in history from UCLA. He has published numerous articles in both Chinese and English on the history of the Jianghan plain in Hubei province. His research interests include agrarian history, environmental change, and rural studies. He is managing editor of Rural China: An International Journal of History and Social Science.

Shi Ye is professor in the Humanities and Communications College at Shanghai Normal University. She wrote her PhD thesis on ‘The Writing on Homosexuality in Ancient Chinese Literature’ in 2008. Her main research interest is in Ancient Chinese Literature, specializing in the fiction of the Ming and Qing dynasties. She has published two books and more than thirty academic papers, two of which received awards from the Shanghai Government in 2010 and 2012.

Li Zhenzhong is an international student from Georgia Southwestern University.