General Notes:
- The dollar amounts for each award vary significantly, reflecting the diverse needs of the university and the specific goals of each program.
- Awards for graduate students may be subject to different criteria, such as academic performance, research quality, or leadership contributions.
- Undergraduate awards often focus on recognition and support for specific projects or achievements, with varying dollar amounts based on the nature of the support needed.
- Graduate student awards may target research support, travel funds, or special recognition for leadership and service.
- Many awards are subject to revision based on future book prices or other factors, indicating a dynamic approach to fund allocation.
- Discretionary funds allow for flexibility in funding areas not explicitly categorized, accommodating unforeseen needs or opportunities.

Additional Information:
- The process for award distribution typically involves a committee review or selection by faculty, with decisions based on criteria established for each award.
- Awards may be processed through various payment methods, including ProCard or through the PRD (PBS-Check) system for disbursement.
- The table summarizes key information related to each award, including award categories, eligibility criteria, and funding details, providing a comprehensive overview of support opportunities available to students and faculty.
